Vital Religion

Lesson for February 17, 1963

There is a form of insanity in which the patient loves, not living human beings, but corpses. Only crazy people prefer dead things to living. And yet there are people so far from normal that they love dead religion rather than vital religion. In fact, there is so much nonvital religion in the world, so much dismay religion, machine-made imitation of the real thing, that some people make the mistake of supposing dead religion to be the only going variety, the only kind available, and so they can't be blamed for wanting no part of it.

Vital Religion Is Big

In the time of Christ, Jesus had his troubles and struggles with men who had a dead sort of religion. His vital religion shocked them, even angered them. They couldn't understand it, or Him, and they didn't like Him. One difference between the Pharisees' religion and the religion of Jesus was that they were more concerned with trifles than with bigger things. They were very particular about matters that didn't matter. They were more particular about washing their hands and their dishes in certain prescribed ways, than about the world into their minds. At another time Jesus reminded them that they were so busy counting the little green herbs in their vegetable gardens that they neglected the greater things, such as justice and the love of God. Religion is vital when it is big, concerned with big ideas, duties, hopes. It is vital when it can rise above trifles and see things in true perspective. It is vital when it looks beyond the horizon to God's children everywhere. Nonvital, trifling, dead religion is nevertheless popular, always was. It is popular because it is easy. It is easy to memorize a set of rules and keep them — as can be done without much thinking — than it is to think out, maybe desperately, what is right to do in new situations and conditions.

Jesus called the people who had this dead kind of religion hypocrites, and so they were. For another characteristic of nonvital religion is that there is a wide gulf between what the man says and what in his heart he really wants and prefers. In vital religion there is no such gap. What a man who has a genuine case of religion says, comes out of his heart. As Middleton Murry once said, "Jesus would rather be denied by a true man than confessed by a liar." Insincere religion is on the death-list because being the kind of thing it is, it can't live. Take two important activities, Bible reading and prayer, as an example. These are the source of life in true religion. The sincerely religious man will do what feeds and strengthens the faith within him, the insincere man, having no real heart-interest in God or his people, does not feed on the "bread of life," he does not seek God in prayer unless he is scared to death. And of course his religion can't be vital.

Vital Religion Faces Forward

Another criticism Jesus made of the Pharisees was that they thought too much about tradition. All men, including true Christians, have more than a touch of this habit of looking backward. We all know people who have one smashing argument (they think!) for not doing something they plainly ought to do: "I've never done it before." Religion that keeps a memory book but no hope chest is not vital. It may be an interesting antique, a quaint skeleton; but it is not vital.

Tradition is not a bad thing in itself. But when tradition becomes, as it did for the Pharisees who opposed Jesus, a substitute for personal and living faith; when it gets into the eyes like smoke so that one cannot see what the world around us is like; when it hypnotizes us into looking backward instead of forward, when it so occupies our minds that we think the only good day was yesterday; when it lays upon our living hands and hearts the dead weight of our ancestors' beliefs and prejudices, and would substitute their dead minds for our living ones, then tradition has killed religion.

Pastor Says

"I JUST DON'T HAVE TIME"

This is the constant reply to those of us who serve our Lord through the ministry of His Church. Because most of the people in the church are voluntary — without pay — pastors are reluctant to press duties upon the people. They would rather have volunteers.

This, however, raises a question: "Is the work of Christ through His Church a voluntary matter? Perhaps it may be in some activities, but to serve the Lord is no mere call for volunteers. It is the command of our Lord. Jesus said, "He that would follow after me MUST . . ."

It is a command to obey or disobey. One may willingly surrender to the Lord as Saviour. In doing this he always gets more than he can ever give back — but once the surrender is made he now comes under command. The soldier may volunteer for the service of his country. Once this has taken place he becomes subject to the command.

Time is the most valuable commodity in today's world. The great Paul said, "redeem the time . . ." Each has 24 hours of the day. All life revolves around time. We get up at a certain time to work, or, we go to school, catch a bus, etc., on the basis of time. It has been estimated that a person has about two thousand hours of leisure each year, which makes about eleven years of leisure time in the life of the average man. Judging from what time we missed his train because of the lack of knowledge of time. So he spent the rest of his life telling time. For what?

Still here I am in age — we may not know how much — only God knows that. So we must use well the time we have, even when no man can work. One of the deepest regrets, often expressed to me, is that people do not use their time to advantage. Some years ago a man, 80 years of age, said to me, there was once a time when I had the urge to worship and serve the Lord. The challenge was clear and the call was certain. But now, in my maturing years, I have lost this desire, this urge, this sense of opportunity. A mutural friend said one day, "It's no use to pray, God doesn't hear." The sad thing about this was the wrong use of time. One doesn't just decide to pray, and "presto" prayer becomes effective. The time element is essential. Daniel prayed morning, noon, and evening, and when the decree came for him to shut off his prayer life, he had the fortitude to go on. He has used his allotted time.

The time for doing life's work is now. "Now is the accepted time, today is the day of salvation." Make the most of it, the great apostles say. One never knows when the door will be shut; when the gate into life will be closed; when the sign of eternity will be hung upon the wall of time saying, "No more opportunity" — eternity has come.

So the key word in time is "remember." Remember now the Creator in the days of the youth". Like the development of an atomic clock which the Chase National Bank of New Yor City uses to tell the minutes, hours, days and years, we the people of God's creation should develop a more "eternity" in our lives, by using their God - given commodity called time. Give it all to the Lord. Yes, we do have time. One of these days the call will come from the creator of the universe, and the sovereign God of all mankind saying, tonight, or today they soul is required of thee.

Wyoming Summer by Mary O'Hara

Mary O'Hara, the author of My Friend Flicka, Thunderhead and Green Grass of Wyoming, returns to the ranch where Flicka was born and writes of real people and events. She lived for two years on the Goose Bar Ranch in Wyoming — and this principal characters are her husband and of how they battled with a fierce winter — and ten energetic boys who attended the dude ranch summer camp. Few author. have ever written of ranches animals and people with more warmth and understanding.

The Reverend C. Heinz—This is a novel in which you will accompany a Moravian minister on a journey from the moment he awakes at 6:45 a.m. to the moment of a harrowing bout with death at 2:55 p.m. — During this brief period he performs one simple operation and one extremely difficult one.

As the reader accompanies him, he will come to know and understand this surgeon's ambitions and fears — the evolution of his religion and the development of his attitude toward death and the origin and growth of his skills.

The two above books are the double selection of the Literary Guild for the month of March which the Appomattox County Library is a participating member.

"Josephine" And Her Friends

"Josephine", the golden hamster, is the hamster to become a favorite pet of A. Pitsenberger family, of Appomattox. She likes peanuts and will climb her cage to prove it. She is shown above with Bragg, daughter of Coach and Mrs. Bragg, of Appomattox, who was visiting Sandra and Carlene Pitsenberger on a recent weekend. "Josephine" cannot quite remember Bragg's name, but calls her "George" in their affections. Sandra Arlene (ola) Patty. George was their first hamster pet and knew some clever tricks that Josephine is slow to learn. Another pet literally "turned green" while all the talk centered on hamsters. This is Lizzie, the Lizard — a chameleon who is now in a plastic showcase and fed live flies. Golden or Syrian hamsters are sometimes used for scientific research. The Pitsenbergers said, and chameleons are native to many southern states. are sold as pets in the North.

Dark-Fired, Sun-Cured

Small Acreage Cuts Set For Local Growers

The Agriculture Department announced Wednesday 1963 crop acreage allotments for fire-cured type 21, fire-cured types 22 and 23, dark air-cured types 35 and 36, and Virginia sun-cured type 37.

It said allotments for most farms will be about the same as for last year's crop.

All four types will be grown and marketed under federal marketing quotas which provide for penalties on excess sales.

The 1963 allotment for fire-cured type 21 tobacco was set at 9,500 acres, compared with 9,149 last year. Virtually all of this type tobacco is grown in Virginia with warehouses at Farmville, Blackstone and Lynchburg. The department reserved 22.64 acres of the total allotment for new farms.

The allotment for Virginia sun-cured type 37 tobacco—grown wholly in Virginia—was set at 3,773.58 acres, compared with 4,207.15 last year. Of the new allotment, 9.43 acres were reserved for new farms.

The 1963 allotment for fire-cured types 22 and 23 tobacco was set at 33,626 acres, compared with 33,912 last year. The allotment by states included: Illinois, 0.1 acre, Kentucky 15,-516.22, and Tennessee, 17,426.86 Reserve for new farms was 82.55 acres.

The allotment for dark air-cured types 35 and 36 tobacco was put at 15,820 acres compared with 15,903 last year. The allotments by states included: Indiana, 40.71 acres; Kentucky, 13,463.71; Tennessee, 2,276.39, and for new farms, 39.55.
